Give Them a Chance!

That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.

When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there your lungs cannot do their work. And what they do, they do badly. Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and lung diseases and lung troubles, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boucher's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if every-thing else has failed, you may depend upon it.

THE BUSINESS END OF THE VIPER.

Dealers Afraid To Keep the Deadly Snake, Which Are Mostly Used by Physicians.

Referring to a recent case of a young man in New York being bitten by a copperhead snake, Mr. Reiche, the famous wild beast man of Park Row, said: "Then he is going to get well! I would not have thought it possible for the copperhead to be the most deadly of North American snakes, and a bite from him is about as near sure death as a man can get. However, everything depends on the promptness and coolness with which a man treats himself after he is bitten."

"Far worse," said Mr. Reiche. "It is by no means uncommon for a man to be bitten by a rattlesnake and get well. In fact there is one old fellow near Charleston, S. C., who catches snakes for a living, who has been bitten a great many times. I don't know how many, but enough to have gotten used to it. He has some kind of medicine that he takes for an antidote, but he doesn't rely on that alone. He trusts largely to the conventional remedy of whiskey, and takes that in large doses—very large. In fact," continued Mr. Reiche, "smiling quietly, 'I rather think he likes to be bitten.'"

"I am not an expert in snakes, so I would not deny nor affirm that in the case referred to, the snake is a veritable copperhead. If it is, it is a rare specimen for the trade in ophiophiles of this variety is very limited. The best use that most people find for them is to kill them as quickly as possible. There is no risk, however, that men will not run for money, and so it is not surprising that there is a constant traffic, though a small one, even in these venomous creatures. There are only two places in New York where one is likely to find one for sale, and those are Burns' shop in Roosevelt street, where snakes of all kinds are the staple goods, and Reiche's place, where they are only a small fraction of the stock."

The demand for poisonous snakes, excepting for use in humorous paragraphs, is very limited. Of course, no menagerie, dime museum, circus or zoological garden can be considered fully equipped without a few box constrictors and fancy snakes of different kinds, but the most poisonous kinds are too risky even for the average showman, and they are generally only to be seen in the large zoological gardens."

So it comes about that there is a constant demand for even such things as rattlesnakes, copperheads and moccasins. The excessive care with which they are handled makes accidents rare."

Aside from the demand for exhibition, there is a certain limited demand from physicians who want these snakes for purposes of scientific experiment. The lot of an unfortunate snake which is handed over to the tender mercies of a physician is not likely to be a happy one, for, although he will be allowed to gratify himself by biting various rabbits, pigeons, dogs, and the like, in order that the doctor may study the symptoms, he will be teased beyond endurance to make him as angry as possible and will meet a speedy and miserable death when he shall have served his purpose. Moreover, he will be charged by his captors with poisoning him to bite at, which is a thing no self-respecting snake can be expected to like. This is done in order that the venom from his fangs may be collected and analyzed. There are, however, few physicians who carry their devotion to science to such lengths as to lead them to monkey with copperheads. DAVID A. CURTIS.

A GOOD DETECTIVE STORY.

The Exceptional Cleverness of an Officer Illustrated.

A lady and a gentleman were traveling together on an English railway. They were perfect strangers to each other. Suddenly the gentleman said: "Madam, I will trouble you to look out of the window for a few minutes; I am going to make some changes in my wearing apparel."

"Certainly, sir," she replied, with politeness, rising and turning her back upon him. In a short time he said: "Now, madam, my change is completed, and you may resume your seat."

When the lady turned her head her male companion, transformed into a dashing lady with a heavy veil over her face, "Now, sir, or madam, whichever you like," said the lady, "I must trouble you to look out of the window, for I also have some changes to make in my apparel."

"Certainly, madam," and the gentleman in lady's attire immediately complied.

"Now, sir, you may resume your seat." To his great surprise, on resuming his seat, the gentleman in female attire found his lady companion transformed into a man. He then laughed and said: "It appears that we were both anxious to avoid recognition. What have you done? I have not changed a hair."

"And I," said the whilom lady, as he dexterously fettered his wrists with a pair of handcuffs, "am Detective Jones of Scotland Yard, and in female apparel have shadowed you. Now," drawing a revolver, "keep still."

And he did.

Reward and Remuneration.

Just as a friend of ours who lives in Winslow had completed a watering trough by the roadside and stood watching it as it filled with clear, cool water from the spring above, an elderly couple of well-to-do appearance stopped for their horse to drink.

Nothing the delight of the animal and realizing the benefit of the contrivance to the public, the lady remarked to Mr. D.: "The Lord will reward you for this."

"I have no doubt of it, Madam," said Mr. D., with a low bow and a twinkle in his eye, "but I shall make out my bill to the Selectmen."—Waterville (Me.) Mail.

Some Other Story.

"Boy!" said a Woodward avenue grocer to a lad who was helping himself to grapes, "I don't recall that your father is a customer here."

"Don't you?"

"Never saw him that I know of."

"Then he must be a funny man. He's been dodging this store all summer, and I had figured that he was out on you for about $35 and couldn't raise the shekels. I'll go home and break the good news."

CASH FROM A CORPSE.

The Ghastly Story of One of His Official Acts by an Ex-Public Administrator of New York.

Algernon S. Sullivan, once Public Administrator of the City of New York, gave the following grim and ghastly story to the writer, who produces it in the words of the narrator.

"An unknown man died a natural death, and the case came under my cognizance as Public Administrator. There was nothing about the case which appeared at all suspicious, and we sent the body to an undertaker for burial. We advertised the circumstances, citing the relatives or heirs to appear and take possession of his effects, but there was no reply and the man was buried in a cemetery in New Jersey. The only witness in the case had been the landlady.

"It was several weeks after the burial and I had almost forgotten the affair when I received a letter from a village in Central Pennsylvania. It was from the family of the dead man. They proved the relatives by describing him minutely and by documents. They had not heard of his death until just previous to writ-ting, not having been in the habit of reading the New York papers. Their information had come to them from a friend, who had some time after its publication come across a copy of the journal containing the advertisement.

"They started me not a little by writing that just previous to his departure for New York he had quietly sold his farm for $4,000 and the money had disappeared with him and they wanted to know where it was.

"It was my business to secure that $4,000, and I had only secured $400. I employed detectives and had them dig the landlady. They squeezed him dry as a sponge and still got not the slightest information.

"Then they looked up the persons who had been in the house at the time that the young farmer had been living there.
There were a dozen detectives employed as my expense to shadow a crowd of toughs, who, if they had taken the money, undoubtedly had had time to put it in a secure place.

"Several weeks passed by and the result was discouraging. The only thing that we could get was obtained from the landlady. He was present when the man died, and present when the undertaker came to take him away. He was positive that no one else had been near him.

"Some of the detectives were certain of the landlady's guilt. They said he had been seen lately with a large amount of money, but they could not get proof enough to arrest him. I wrote the landlady to the man's relatives. They replied that they must have that money, and intimated that I knew more than I told.

"Now," Mr. Sullivan proceeded, "in one of the letters that I received from the relatives was a statement to the effect that the $4,000 had been placed by the young man in a wallet, which he wore on a belt around his body.

"I sat down one night to think it all over and then I was struck with an inspiration. I went right out that night to see the undertaker, and when I saw him I felt sure I was saved. I was rather excited, but after having pumped him, I made it clear to him that I could put him in a box if he did not tell me the truth. What I supposed was so.

"I found one of my most trusty clerks, and late at night he started from the Jersey City ferry with a commission from me. That commission he showed to a man in charge of the cemetery where the Pennsylvania farmer was buried. He got a permit from him, and with two laborers armed with picks and shovels, he went to the stoneless grave and began operations.

"It was the blackest of dark nights. It had rained, and the air was damp. A heavy twenty-mile gale groaned and screaked over the trees. The expressionless faces of the diggers were made ghastly in the light of the solitary flickering lantern. When they reached the bottom of the grave, the spade struck the coffin with a ringing sound that made my clerk shudder convulsively.

"They pulled up the box. It came up slowly, like a fiend from the lower regions. They pried off the lid with a pick and my clerk came forward and fu-lashed up the job. One of the men held up the lantern. The sockets of the dead man's eyes stared vacantly, the cheek bones had crept through the skin, and the lips had fallen at the corners into a ghastly and horrible smile.

"Somewhat, my clerk managed to lift up the dead man's blouse, and there beneath it, was the belt and the wallet!
In the wallet was the lost money. There were $4,000 in bank notes. Their burial in the close air of the coffin and next to the decaying corpse had changed them into an almost unrecognizable mass of sticky paper. It was all I could do the next morning to get the Treasury officials to take the money and redeem it in gold.

"I sent that money that day to the relatives in Pennsylvania, with a note informing them of the cause of the delay and of the way in which it was finally discovered."

THE HUDSON AND NEW YORK.

Why the Great City Distanced Philadelphia in the Race for Commercial Supremacy.

But for the Hudson there would be no New York. The only river on the whole Atlantic coast whose tide water breaks through the Appalachian chain of mountains. It had furnished the best line of communication from the lakes to the sea since the country was discovered; first for traders, next for military expeditions, finally for the mighty traffic which the canal and the railroad brought. Without the Hudson New York might possibly have become as big as Porto Rico or Salem, and Philadelphia, her old time rival city, would have remained the metropolis, as at one time she formerly expected to do. Every time a New York merchant goes through the Highlands of the Hudson he ought to thank fortune that that narrow, tortuous, twisted channel was hewn through the solid mountains before there was any such thing as trade.

THE SOOTHING CIGAR.

A Philosophical Physician Clears Up the Mystery of Its Fascination.

An Albany physician, who is something of an investigator, says that smoking is not good for any man to let as his physical condition is concerned; that it is only good to relieve mental depression; that it does so simply by diverting a man's mind from himself and from objects that worry him.

"Nothing," said he, "requires more devotion to it for its enjoyment as a cigar.
It is not the taste of tobacco that one enjoys. It is looking at the smoke, inhaling and smelling it, and knocking off the ashes. All these things divert the mind and so drive dull care away." Albany

THE PLATFORM.
The Republicans of Washoe, proud of the past and hopeful for the future, heartily endorse the platform and nominees of the National Republican Convention, as adopted at Chicago, and the Republican State Convention at Winnemucca, and pledge a rousing majority for Harrison and Morton and Protection, and Murphy and Bartine and the ticket nominated by this Convention. We demand legislation from both Government and State in regard to irrigation, and for the improvement of our natural waterways, as well as for the storage of water, whereby the natural advantages of this section can be improved to their fullest capacity. We demand the most rigid economy in State and County affairs, and the establishment of the State's expenses upon such a basis as will secure good government at the lowest rate of taxation. We maintain that a rate of seventy-five cents should be and is sufficient to provide revenue for the State Government.
In view of the rejection of the new Chinese treaty by the Mongolian Government we demand the total and absolute exclusion of all Chinese, and they must go.
